The Baltic Sea has an important role as an ecosystem for fish and shellfish. For over 150 years it has been recognised as a major environment for the anadromous fish. More than a hundred years ago, this population started to recover, and today, the number of stocked fish exceeds the natural growth rate. It is still the largest population of anadromous fish in the Baltic, but as industrialisation in the area has reduced the amount of available habitat, the growth rate of the fish has become restricted. In order to understand the status of the fish it is necessary to know what they have been doing for the last 100 years. The literature was re-examined and the records analysed with respect to timing of growing up in different age classes, size at spawning and time after spawning. The result is a study of historical development, and also a description of the present situation of the two populations of salmon, the marine Oncorhynchus nerka and the fresh water Oncorhynchus masquinongy, in the Baltic.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a hub unit, for use in a mobile electronic device such as a cellular phone, a PDA, and a
